Eastern Sporting Men Believe Fifteenth Infantry Sharpshoot-Berger Slipped One Over on Johnson.

New York, Aug. 12.-The actual signing of an agreement between James J. Jeffries and Jack Johnson for a fight for fries and Jack Johnson for a fight for the world's heavyweight champlonship has given great satisfaction to sporting men in the east, who figure that Jefries and his manager, Sam Berger, have won a victory by pinning Johnson down to an actual arrangement for the much-discussed battle. Johnson's conduct during the interview with Berger in Chicago and his willingness to let Jeffries dictate the division of the purse, together with his offers to bet Berger that Jeffries would in this vicinity.

Followers of the fighting game will be greatly interested in the manner in which Jeffries divides the purse money. Johnson's offer to let Jeffries dictate the terms, even to a "winner take all," clause is believed by many here to be a bluff, and that Johnson will not really stand for this when the final agreements are signed. This magnanimity by Johnson is taken to mean that he, himself, has little idea that there will be a fight. There is a story current here that Johnson in the last few months has been spending money at such a lavish rate that he has little left and that he was anxious to sign any terms suggested by Berger, in the belief of the fort team of the shooters on the return home. at such a lavish rate that he has little left and that he was anxious to sign any terms suggested by Berger, in the belief that it would bring him additional advertising, which would be valuable to him in his show business. In fact, there is an underlying current of feeling among the sporting men, or perhaps a fear that Jeffries and Johnson will never fight.

Immediately upon receiving the message Heagren announced that he would book Johnson for the saucer track next Wednesday night. Just what his program will be on that occasion Heagren does not know as yet, but he has several local aspirants for pugilistic honors who are anxious to go on with Johnson. of meeting and also that I had been the introducer.
I spoke to him once about this talent of I spoke to him the about this talent of his and he looked rather askance as if he had never given the subject hought thought, relapsed for a moment into reflection and came again to the surface to tay: "Well, perhaps, perhaps I have" you know the quick, jerky way he would ear that.

"I remember," he went on, recalling a recent episode, "that at a little entertainment given me the other night at a rlab we were discussing early days of acing and I turned to a man present and salis. That was when we played tigether, Mr. Soandso,' referring to a quoted incident. "The man, a well known banker, looked coveried then annoved and religious particles."

"The man, a well snown banker, looked surprised, then annoyed, and will considerable bluster remarked: I'm not an actor. Mr. I'm no. I'm a plain, everyday business man.

"Oh, but you were er an actor at the time." I repeated in a little louder voice, and then of course everybody stopped to listen as nobody had up to that inoment the slightest suspicion that he had ever been on the stage, a fact, it was easy to see, which he wanted for some reason to keen hid ceep bid

"I persisted in my assertion and he blistered and bellowed more and more in contradiction. At last I flicked the as-off my cigar and said: "Of course loop were not playing under your name then. You were Mr. Thom it was at the Theatre Royal. Ed He gave up the game then, laughed as it it was all a good joke and confessed that who can even be called an actor by the most lenient critic." He fixed John Hare for a moment, and Hare, gentle as he was, looked daggers at him.

There was at that time, as always.

Finally he turned to Irving again and fairly shrieked:

"Would that I could find some far off island, some island in the distant seas, where I could never again have my eyes blasted by the sight of tragedians who walk like damned triangles; yes, Mr. Irving like damned triangles; yes, Mr. Ir ing, like damned triangles; yes, Mr. Irving, like damned triangles."

Recalling Irving's peculiar gait, you can imagine the sensation. We expected an outburst, for human nature had just about reached the limit of endurance, but with a little move of the head and hand Irving morely said. Irving merely said:
"That's a pretty good idea of yours.

COLOMBIA'S PRESIDENT, (Washington Post.) "I was in Venezuela and Colombia in 1907," said J. C. Howell of New York at the Riggs house. "President Reyes of Colombia had been power a couple years, and when I was in Bogota, and already the country was fast getting straightened out of the revolutionary kinks that he found it in when he seized the presidency in 905. "Reyes is an extraordinary man. There is not a better executive or an abler statesman or soldier in the whole of South America. The Colombians are a contentious lot, and it required the severest measures on the part of Reyes when he took the presidency to establish safety and order in the republic. I think he will return from Paris, as from what I know of the man it is incomprehensible to me that he would ever run away from anything. "It is not generally known in this country that Colombia is almost as large as the whole of our middle west
